The Tribune Fresh Air Fund

The Fund Shows a Favorable Balance of Trade

If an excess of exports over imports indicates a good trade condition, then The Tribune Fresh Air Fund is still flourishing. Its exports of children to the country yesterday were 427 net, while its imports from the country were only 332. And the excess didn't result from a dropping off of imports to a point below normal, either.

From the everyday trade economist's point of view, however, the situation would have had one unfavorable aspect—the quality of the imported goods was far superior to that of the exported product. That fact would have been evident to even the casual observer. In fact, in some cases the consignees didn't recognize them at first as the expected articles.

There was, for example, a mother who expected a consignment of a seven-year-old girl from Penn Yan, N. Y. She'd seen her little piece of goods only two weeks before, but, though she'd looked over the sixty-six lots arriving from Penn Yan, she didn't recognize hers.

"Where's mine?" she inquired anxiously of the superintendent, who was directing the distribution of the various lots. "I don't see her!"

Just then, however, a little baggage detached herself from the cargo, and with a shrill pipe of "Mama" began to trundle herself toward the anxious consignee.

"Oh," laughed the consignee, "I didn't know her because she has a new hat. And she looks different, too, her face is so round."

And that was the general comment of all the consignees. Each of the sixty-six pieces of the important cargo brought forth some such exclamation as, "They look so much nicer than we expected," or "My, how fat they are!"

This wasn't true only of the consignment from Penn Yan, but also of a larger one numbering 237 pieces from Binghamton, N. Y., and of others from Greene and Herkimer, N. Y. Even the consignors couldn't restrain their enthusiasm over the fineness of the goods shipped. Walter B. Tower, consignee in chief for the community of Penn Yan, said in a letter announcing the arrival of his lot in New York:

"They were truly a wonderful group of children. Not one second of trouble have they caused, and many a blessing has come to the people who have entertained them. We shall all regret to have them leave."

And anticipating a continuance of trade relations in future years, "I think that I can place two or three carloads of the children in our county next year."

George J. Michelbach, the Binghamton consignee, had much the same comment to make on his big shipment and the same sort of forecast concerning next year's prospects. And he is one of the world's leading experts on Fresh Air cargo, having been in the business of shipping and reshipping them for more than twenty years.

Just to prove the statement concerning the quality of the outgoing goods, the judgment of a bystander who saw a cargo of sixty pieces marked "Rutland, Vt.," pass through the Grand Central Terminal, must be quoted:

"My goodness, to look at 'em, let's certainly need the country to freshen them up. Here's a little money to help the good work along."

And that's the beauty of it all. An excess of exports, looking "Fresh Air" of to-day becomes in two weeks an import cargo of goods of so much finer quality that their parents themselves can't recognize them when they get back after the freshening up process is complete.

Who'll help pay the freight to the freshening up place?

Judge Lynn Dies Suddenly at Home In Good Ground

Veteran N. Y. Jurist Was on Municipal Court Bench 23 Years; Made Record as Assistant District Attorney

Judge Wauchope Lynn, well known as a jurist and prosecutor and for twenty-three years a justice of the first District Municipal Court here, died Tuesday night at his summer home, Lynnciff, Good Ground, L. I. Although lately his health had not been the best, his death was the outcome of only a few hours' actual illness. Early Tuesday afternoon he complained to members of his family of feeling ill, and physicians were summoned to the house. He grew steadily worse, and died at 5 o'clock. Death was attributed to heart disease and acute indigestion.

Judge Lynn was sixty-four years old. Throughout his career he was prominently identified with the social and political life of New York. He retired from the bench December 31, 1918.

Judge Lynn came to this city from Ireland in 1866, when he was ten years old, and entered his first employ as a maker of chemical apparatus. He took up the study of law in 1873.

He attended debates at Cooper Union and later entered the New York University Law School, from which he was graduated in 1883. He was admitted to the bar in the same year. His first public office was that of Assistant District Attorney under De Lancey Nicolli.

He was a member of the Iroquois Club in Greenwich Village, and also was a member of the Monticello Club and the Tammany Society.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Katherine E. Lynn, a son, Norman, and two daughters, Mrs. John and Mrs. Harry Gordon Lynn.

Governor Smith was a close friend of Judge Lynn, and visited him at his Long Island home on Monday, accompanied by Mrs. Smith. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made.

Kenneth G. White Dies; Was Investment Expert

Valuation of Railroad Bonds and Construction of Mortgages Were Specialties

Word has reached this city of the recent death in Cherry Valley, N. Y., of Kenneth G. White, one of the firm of White & Kemble, 100 Broadway, 10th Liberty Street. He had spent his summer vacations for several seasons at Cherry Valley, which had been the home of his father and other members of his family.

Mr. White was an investment expert and was considered an authority on the valuation of railroad bonds and the phrasing and construction of mortgages for securing them. He was instrumental in obtaining the passage of several recent laws in New York, Connecticut and Massachusetts, designed to protect savings banks from the mortgages for securing them.

At an early stage in his career he devised a method of coloring railroad maps in such a fashion as to illustrate at a glance what portions of railroad properties were covered by mortgages. These he published in sets covering all the leading roads, and they were placed with banks and other financial institutions.

His principal business consisted of revising these maps and keeping them up-to-date, as well as the publication of other financial information and numerical statistics in which the investing public was interested.
